

Gestalt Ways of Being: A Playful Exploration

Fri 28th & Sat 29th March 2025

Facilitated by:

Lucy Ball & Sue Holland

Join us for a development workshop, set in a spacious, light studio in the beautiful Devon countryside.

We'll share and apply some of the Gestalt principles that are important to us in our work and lives. All of this with a spirit of play and exploration, working creatively in nature.

The time together will be shaped and co-created with you, depending on your interests.

Gestalt principles we will explore include:

- Trust and support.
- Awareness in the here and now.
- Cycles of experience.
- The fertile void.
- Attending to relationships and contact.
- Experimenting and meaning-making.
- Noticing context and systems.
- Sharing space and holding boundaries.

You don't need any Gestalt training to join.

Due to the nature of the work, attendance for the whole course is required.

About your facilitators

Lucy Ball is an executive coach, counsellor, facilitator, coach supervisor and teacher of Gestalt. She has spent over 20 years working in organisations supporting and developing leaders and leadership teams through change. More recently she has added counselling into her work and works at Somerset Counselling Service which is a charity offering affordable, local, long-term counselling.

Passionate about the environment, Lucy is a facilitator at University College London's Climate Action Unit helping to turn climate anxiety into agency. Lucy's love affair with Gestalt goes back 20 years and she continues to learn and teach as a faculty member at the Gestalt International Study Center in Boston, MA.

Sue Holland is a leadership coach and has worked as a facilitator of change for over 25 years, bringing Gestalt principles and ways of being into her work. She is curious about developmental transitions in adult life and works with people around resourcefulness and resilience, supporting them to remain open, effective, and potent during these times.

Her practice is informed by many things – a deep and connected love of the natural world and how balance is maintained, at a biochemical, organism and ecosystem level. She applies this in her work with people and systems – enabling sustainability in its broadest sense.
